I. History of GI in Cambodia

- ❖ MoC Developing Geographical Indication since 2007 as following:
 - Geographical Indications (GI) System including: Establishing the Geographical Indication Office
 - Legal framework and implementing the pilot project to register "Kampot pepper" and "Kampong Speu palm sugar" which is a unique products in relation to the geographical area, knowledge, know-how, culture of the local people, and has a well-known reputation as a geographical indication.
- ❖ GI is an IP tool that plays an important role in promoting entrepreneurship, developing agricultural communities, increasing community income, creating competitiveness in trade, which contributes to social, economic, cultural and tourism development in Cambodia.
- ❖ GI Products provide a value added in terms of economic, social, environment, cultural and tourism for Cambodia, but there is a need to develop a strong GI system, which must be indispensable from the relevant ministries, institutions and development partners to ensure the sustainability of GI and promoting the listing of more potential products as GI.

Mondulkiri Wild Honey – A Geographical Indication from Cambodia

Geographical Indication Protects Giant Honey Bees and Expected to Raise Living Standards for the Pnong Indigenous Peoples

The Apis dorsata bee is a giant honeybee with little patience for interference and aggressive defense strategies but for centuries, in the northeastern thickly forested mountains areas of Cambodia, the Pnong ethnic group has mastered honey-harvesting skills. The wild honey from Mondulkiri, well known by Cambodian consumers, is now protected by a geographical indication, bringing hopes for increased revenue for harvesters, and heightened protection of wild bee colonies and the forest.
